No Human Way to Kill

Monday, October 11, 2010, Panel Discussion, 1:00 - 2:30 PM

The discussion, held on the World Day Against the Death Penalty, will reveal thought provoking and personal insights from victims on all sides of the death penalty. In conjunction with universities across the United States and Canada we are bringing students, academics and surrounding community members together to connect around this event, which illuminates key issues related to human rights, justice, forgiveness and the type of society we wish to be.

The Event will be streamed live from White Box and chaired by UK Artist and Essex Human Rights Centre Fellow Robert Priseman whose haunting etchings of the different execution methods inspired the No Human Way to Kill book.

Eminent Speakers include: Reverend Cathy Harrington who negotiated a life sentence for her own daughter's murderer. Renny Cushing, whose father was murdered in 1988, and he is now the Director of Murder Victims Families for Human Rights. Barbara Lewis has lost an uncle, niece and nephew to violence, and her son has been on death row for the past 20 years. She speaks from the perspective of families whose voices are rarely heard- those who have loved ones on death row or have been executed. Anne Coleman, whose daughter was murdered in 1985 and to this day the murder remains unsolved. Anne met Barbara at an assemblymen's hearing on death row and was struck by her pain as a grieving mother for her son who is on death row. The two women are great friends and travel together to share their parallel stories as mothers searching for justice.

The panel discussion will be streamed online from 1pm to 2:30pm EST. For more details about the streaming of the event please contact Mary at msnow@essex.ac.uk or join us on facebook.com/NoHumanWaytoKill.

We also invite you to participate creatively by submitting a piece of artwork (a drawing, photograph, and painting ext) that expresses your thoughts on the death penalty. Please send a low resolution jpeg to msnow@essex.ac.uk, which we will then display as a virtual gallery on the 10th and thereafter.
